Oil, gas exploration halt threatened if Hancock's wetland law critics persist

MARY JO JACOBI

Bay native with White House staff

Mary Jo Jacobi of Bay St. Louis accompanied President Reagan to Jackson recently for Mississippi Harmony festivities in honor of U.S. Representative Trent Lott.

Jacobi was appointed special assistant to Reagan for public liaison on May 1. Her specific liaison responsibilities include business, commerce, and trade.

Prior to joining the White House staff, Jacobi served for two years in the office of Secretary of Commerce Malcolm Baldrige, first as an executive assistant coordinating Cabinet Council activities and more recently as director of the department's Office of Business Liaison.

In her ten years in Washington, Jacobi has held lobby positions with 3M Company and the National Association of Manufacturers, and has served on the Republican staff of the U.S. Senate Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation.

A 1973 graduate of the College of Business Administration of Loyola University of the South in New Orleans, Jacobi received a master of business administration degree in international business from George Washington

Mississippi's claim of some 16,000 south Hancock County acres drew a threat from a state official that oil companies might loose interest in leasing minerals here.

Dr. Richard Leard, director of the State Bureau of Marine Resources in Long Beach, conducted the hearing at the Hancock Courthouse in Bay St. Louis regarding a State Department of Natural Resources request to change the Coastal Wetlands Use Plan to designate another county swamp area as a 'special use district-leased wetlands' to allow oil and gas exploration work.

About 100 people, most of them grumbling and obviously angered, packed the second-floor Courthouse

In addition, Mrs. Alvin Ladner Sr. of Clermont Harbor displayed throughout the gathering and read for the hearing record a hand-printed sign in opposition to the state's wetland claim stating, "Can this really happen in the USA."

Jerry Mitchell, BMR Coastal Program Division chief, explained the proposed district includes property from Bayou Cadet westward to the East Peari River and along that river upstream to the confluence of Bogue Homa Bayou.

The only special use district designated thus far on the Mississippi Gulf Coast is a Hancock wetland area near the mouth of Jourdan River which includes disputed property in the ongoing 'Cinque Bambini vs. the State' land ownership suit.

Mack Cameron, an assistant state attorney general, at the hearing threaten-"If a decision is made not to lease. that's fine. But there are oil people in this room and if they can't lease with the state that makes it less attractive to the oil companies."

"The state has owned this property since 1817," Cameron said regarding Mississippi's undelineated claim to

Police act quickly; recover stolen purse

By ELLIS CUEVAS A county resident on parole was arrested and charged with grand larceny in connection with a purse stolen from a vehicle in the Dedeaux Community on Friday evening according to Alvin Ladner, Hancock County investigator.

Ladner said, "Darin Kilpatrick, 19, Rt. 2, Box 756, Bay St. Louis was arrested at his mobile home in Bayou Phillips Community for allegedly taking a purse owned by Joyce Cuevas. Kilpatrick was a laborer at the Dedeaux Community residence doing house repairs and after everyone else left allegedly took the purse from a parked auto.

"This happened at about 8:30 p.m. Friday. The purse was reported to have contained $1600. Some $1699 was recovered when Kilpatrick was arrested, and the balance was still in the purse which was recovered from the woods alongside the road, about onehalf mile from the auto from which it was taken," Ladner added.

Klipatrick was lodged in the Hancock County jail only three hours after the incident was reported.

Ladner said Kilpatrick is being held with no bond because of a parole violation. The grand larceny charges may be presented next week to the Hancock County Grand Jury which will be in seszion, the investigator indiciated.

Ladner who is in charge of the case said a host of law officers which included David Murtagh, Don Coss, Corky Hoda, Rusty Blappert, Floyd Fricke, and John Wilkerson assisted in the inci-

Cameron led the state's defense in Hancock Chancery Court two years ago against local property owners involved in the Cinque Bambini suit.

The assistant attorney general's comments followed a pledge by A.A. (Dolph) Kellar, Hancock Board of Supervisors president, that the county official's 'first order of business' at the group's next meeting (July 18) will be a resolution to the state opposing its wetland claim.

"We're tired of this sort of thing. We're becoming the smallest county in Mississippi," he stated regarding taxexempt land in the National Space Technology Laboratories area and Mississippi's claim to present countytaxed wetland areas.

Bert Courrege, Hancock District One supervisor, and W. Wilson Webre. member of the Bay St. Louis Planning and Zoning Commission, both echoed Kellar's comments regarding the probable loss of county-taxed land.

Clyde Ladner and Sharon Chiniche, both of Bay St. Louis; Ray Chiniche of Biloxi; and several others asked where the state's ownership lines actually lie and Leard repeatedly stated Mississippi owns wetlands 'below the mean high Leard said the Hancock map displayed at the hearing with a red lined area was only a rough representation of the proposed use change area.

But after continued questioning about the ownership lines, Leard replied, "Forget the map!'

Outlook poor for fishermen

No shrimp in Hancock waters

By JUNE M. HEYDT

There won't be much dancing at night-at least not for the local shrimpers, according to Dr. Richard Leard of the Bureau of Marine Resources.

"Mainly because there are no shrimp," said Leard. "Shrimp have to have a certain amount of salt in the water and because of the Bonnet Carre Spillway being opened spilling fresh water into Lake Pontchartrain which then overflowed through the Rigolets into Lake Bourgne and finally into the Mississippi Sound, the shrimp and other salt water fish have gone east."

"I think it will be fall before any shrimp can be caught west of Long Beach," said Leard.

In the fall the shrimp will be white shrimp instead of the brown which run at this time of year. However, Leard said the shrimping all along the coast from Alabama to Texas has been 'very poor.' Bert Courrege, Hancock County District One supervisor, said, "The Pearl River has had much more direct effect on the shrimping industry in our area than the Bonnet Carre Spillway because, before the spillway water reached our area we were already saturated with fresh water from the Pearl." "The shrimpers I have talked to have not caught the first shrimp from Gulfport south to the Pearl River." "The outlook is not very promising," Courrege said. "In the fall," as Dr. Leard says, 'there may be shrimp but, because of the fresh water it has probably effected the spawning which will also effect the amount of shrimp in the fall, Courrege BILOXI DELAY

The scheduled opening of shrimping in a part of Biloxi Bay was delayed Thursday because of the small size of the shrimp, said a spokesman from the Bureau of Marine resources. The area is north of a line extending from Beacon 14 in the Biloxi Channel to

TEXAS TO OPEN

The Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council reports Gulf waters off Texas will reopen to shrimping one-half hour after sunset on July 15.

The season closed on May 27 in a joint conservation effort of the State of Texas and the council.

Poor environmental conditions in the bay nursery areas, however, give little hope for a good brown shrimp season this year, according to a report from Southeast Fisheries Center in Galveston.

The report estimates relative magnitude of the brown shrime crop from data collected from several indicators in Galveston Bay, including bait shrimp production from May and early June.

This year's index is extremely low, SHRIMP-PAGE9A

School board to lire bookkeeper

By JUNEM. HEYDT

The Hancock County School Board began their receivementing Wednesday night by employing Jonnie Roche as bookkeeper for the central office of the Hancock County School District, or the recommendation of Terrell Randolph, superintendent

However, Roche, who was previously bookkeeper for Hancock North Central High School, was hired only through Dec. 1 against the request of Randolph to hire her for the 1983-84 school year.

Monvel Cuevas said, "All noncertified employees are hired from January to January."

Randolph said. The board evidently made another policy that you've been following for the last three years. Because for the last three years everyone you have hired has been for the school year which begins and ends on July 1."

Cuevas agreed but said, "We have decided to go back to the old rule and follow the law as orginally written."

Billy Faye Lyons, board member, asked Randolph, "Why do you want to hire her for longer than December you may not be here after that? The question received no response.

Roche's salary will be $1,130.81 per

In other business, a request to cancel a 16th Section residential lease in section 16-7-14 was approved.

The land had been leased to Johnny Banks, board member, who said, "The land has been in my wife's family for over 100 years, but, we no longer need the land."

Banks said later that his wife is presently negotiating to lease a part of the same acreage because his son owns a home on the land.

Also in other business, the board adopted the standard resignation form for certified personnel.

Charles Genin and Tim Favre were hired as summer maintenance workers at Hancock North Central for a period of up to six weeks.

Suzanne Cleek was granted permission to transfer to Hancock North Central Jr. High as a math teacher.

Susan Hufford's resignation as special education teacher at Charles B. Murphy Elementary School was accepted effective June 30.

Jennifer Smith was hired as special education teacher to replace Hufford.

Randolph asked the board to approve the employment of Rhonda Necaise as summer maintenance employee at Hancock North Central from June 16 through June 24. Necaise who was originally hired by the CETA program was to have reported to the central office. She had no transportation so she reported to HNC. Ceta now refuses to pay her and Randolph would like the board to pick it up.

The case was turned over to Jody Gex, board attorney, to check into the

We never realized how much the overlay was needed until we drove over the new surface on Friday.

It is good to see the city trying to update the streets which are heavily traveled in Bay St. Louis.

We have also noticed the exterior work being done on the Masonic Temple on Main Street, as well as the fresh paint being applied to the old Magnolia State building.

We have also noted a new sign in front of Peoples Federal Savings and Loan on Court Street.

Looks like the downtown area of Bay St. Louis is getting a big face lift which will benefit everyone.

The People's Business

An Open Letter To The President Of The County Supervisors Association:

The Mississippi Association of (county) Supervisors continues to voice its opposition to a mandatory unit system for county road management despite years of studies pointing out the wasteful use of tax dollars under the outdated beat system.

The president of the association has been quoted as saying: "We continue to believe in the democratic process of letting the voters in each of the state's 82 counties decide whether their individual counties will operate on a unit or district (beat) system."

If this is true, Mr. President, then when can the taxpayers of DeSoto and Pike Counties expect aid from the supervisors association?

Remember, Mr. President, it was 10 years ago that citizens of DeSoto County voted in a supervisors-called, countywide election to operate under the unit system.

Nothing was ever done.

Then, about the same time, Pike County taxpayers spent some $10,000 on a feasibility study on the issue of county unit. Professional engineers recommended implementation of the unit system.

The study, initiated by the supervisors, was covered up for six months until the local newspaper found it. The county unit recommendation was

TREATING INSECT STINGS University of Mississippi Medical Center

What are the allergic reactions to insect stings and how are they best treated?

The most common reaction to an insect sting is a painful, itching, swollen area at the site of the sting. This is not an allergic reaction. It occurs as a direct result of the insect's venom on the skin.

An allergic reaction to a sting produces symptoms distant from the site of the sting. Within 10 minutes to an hour, you may have one or more of these: a rash at a site distant from the sting, a choking feeling, fainting and such symptoms of asthma as shortness of breath, wheezing and tightness in the chest. Delay in treatment can lead to shock, loss of consciousness and, in rare cases, death.

Anyone who experiences these symptoms after an insect sting should get in touch with a physician immediately. Ice packs or cold water can be applied while you seek medical help, and, if the sting is on your arm or a leg, a tight bandage may be wrapped between the sting and your heart. Physicians emphas most likely to have these severe reactions generally are those who have a history of allergies. These reactions also are related to adverse reactions to certain drugs, such as penicillin.

If you have had severe allergic reactions to insect stings before, your doctor may prescribe for you prepared syringes of adrenalin which can be injected immediately after a sting. You also may take allergy shots as a preventive measure.

The most common allergic reactions are to the stings of yellow jackets, bees, hornets and wasps. Rarely do the bites of mosquitoes or black flies cause reactions more serious than itching. If you're stung by any of these insects and the discomfort is localized around the sting, put ice or cold water on it to make the injury less painful. Usually, most traces of the sting will be gone within 24 yours.

If the stinger is still in the skin, carefully flick it out with your finger before applying ice or cold water. Don't squeeze it because venom may leak out onto the skin and cause more irritation and itching.

The best way to prevent stings is to avoid these insects. When you have to be in an area where you might get stung, keep thise points in mind:

-Don't wear perfurmes, hair sprays or hair tonics, since they attract in-

---Avoid brightly colored or black clothing; they also draw stinging in-

-Wear shoes, gloves and other protective clothing, such as a hat, longsleeved shirt or blouse and slacks.

-Be aware that uncovered food at a picnic may draw stinging insects.

-Never disturb an insect nest. -If a stinging insect approaches you. avoid sudden movements and walk away slowly.

About a million people in this country have allergic reactions to stings. If you do, or you're with someone who does, the most important point to remember is to seek medical attention promptly after a sting. Reactions can be severe.

USDA scientists develop drug delivery system using red blood cells operation until destructive conditions are corrected.

Scientists with the U.S. Department of Agriculture in Kerrville, Tex. have found that red blood cells can be used to system of drug delivery.

John R. DeLoach, biochemist and research leader with USDA's Agricultural Research Service, says that he and a team of scientists in his laboratory have found a way to use red blood cells as slow-release circulating vehicles for administering drugs.

Simply put, blood is taken from animals (in one series of experiments, Deloach worked with dogs) and the red blood cells are isolated. Then the cells are placed in a dialysis bag and made to swell until microscopic pores develop in the cell membrane. At this point, the red blood cells are removed from the bag and mixed with a drug. Salt concentration of the cells is restored and the cells then shrink to normal size, the small pores close and the drug is trap-

explain why Mississippi's

Now, the red blood cells containing the drug can be remixed with whole blood and injected back into the animal where they will circulate freely and maintain a therapeutic drug level for days or even weeks.

What is the advantage of this system? "Some drugs," sayd DeLoach, "are rapidly destroyed by an organism, such as a farm animal or pet, or are rapidly excreted from it. In either case, the drug is soon gone from where you want it. The system we are working with makes the red blood cells into storage depots that protect the drug from quick destruction and elimination. The drug remains where we want, doing its job, would if it were freely injected." "Further studies may lead to a number of practical applications for this system," says DeLoach. "In both human being and animals, carrier red blood cells may be a means of using drugs that are either highly toxic or have a short useful life in the body. We will be able to sustain optimum levels of such drugs for weeks at a time without the bother of frequent injections."

The scientist went on to explain that, once developed, the new drug therapy system could be quite useful in treating human cancer and tropical diseases, as well as arthropod infestations of livestock.

The system would also be especially useful in administering drugs that are highly toxic, since the drugs would be encapsulated, thus preventing or eliminating the need for high, toxic immediate doses at frequent intervals.

DeLoach recently reported in a scientific journal the promising results he had in encapsulating a cancer drug in the red blood cells of dogs where it circulated and maintained a therapeutic level for 10 days. With conventional free injection, that particular drug has a half-life of only two hours.

The scientists conduct their work at the Agricultural Research Service's U.S. Livestock Insects Laboratory in Kerrville and at the Veterinary Toxicology and Entomology Laboratory, College Station, Texas.

When talking to these landowners, it quickly becomes apparent that they sell timber in this fashion because of two myths near and dear to the hearts of many Mississippi landowners - "I may as well sell it all, the loggers are going to tear down what's left" and "My father clear cut it forty years ago, and it grew back". Let's examine these fallacies.

Does modern logging equipment destroy the remaining timber? No! Equipment doesn't destroy anything, but often inept operators do. Fisheries personnel at the laboratory have found massive mortalities on Mississippi state oyster reefs.

"Oysters on almost 7,000 acres out of approximately 8,000 acres of oyster bottoms are lost," states Bill Demoran, head of the fisheries management sec-

Demoran and staff member John Cirino monitor the state reefs monthly so they can advise the State Bureau of Marine Resources.

They checked conditions on the reefs  sand): about June 1 and the oyster populations were stressed with water salinity nearly zero throughout the western part of Mississippi Sound, where the most extensive and productive reefs are located.

Affected by fresh water

When the area was sampled again on June 17, they found the reefs had been devastated. Huge quantities of fresh water had been flowing into the estuary first, from the Pearl River in April and, since May 20, through the Bonnet Carre' Spillway on the Mississippi

The American oyster Crassostrea virginica is a true estaurine organism that can neither tolerate fresh water for long periods, nor prosper in oceanic salinities (about 32-34 parts per thou-

They are found in salinities ranging from 2.5 ppt to 33 ppt, but they cannot withstand salinities lower than 9 ppt for, indefinite periods. Oysters seem to thrive when salinity is between 15 and 28 ppt.

Marine bivales are considered to have little power of osmoregulation, the ability to regulate the concentration of salt in their tissues

When subjected to low-salinity water, they prevent loss of salts by closing their valves or shells. Locally, oysters can stay closed tightly for periods of three to four weeks. However, when exposed to extremely depressed salinities and water temperatures between 70 and 80°F, the oysters must open their shells to obtain oxygen, and then the tissues are flooded with fresh water and death ensures.

Salinity was zero Demoran said the day they found the mortality on the reefs in the western Sound, salinity was zero at both the surface and bottom on three reefs where they took dredge samples.

Reefs farther west in Hancock County, exposed to fresh water longer, were assumed to be total losses.

At Pass Marianne Reef, about 4 miles off of Pass Christian, 70 out of 93 oysters sampled were dead and 14 were alive (but it was doubtful they could survive).

Because of the location of this reef farther from shore, it would have had the best chance to recover from depressed salinities of the earlier, Pearl River flood.

At Pass Christian reef, one-fourth mile off the beach, salinity was also zero. A sample yielded 109 oysters, 107 dead and 2 alive (but doubtful). A little farther to the east, Long Beach Reef, one-half mile from shore, had a salinity of zero, but 85 out of 100 oysters taken Cirino said the live oysters from the Long Beach reef were in a stressed state, but if they got salt within a week, they possibly lived.

The reason for the Long Beach Reef surviving is that it had not been in fresh water as long as the other reefs," he expleined.

Mortalities predictable High oyster mortalities are predictable with the magnitude of freshwater influx experienced in some years. The Bonnet Carre' flood control structure has been opened six times (in 1937, 1947, 1950, 1973, 1975, and 1979) since the spillway was completed in 1932. Each opening has resulted in mass mortalities.

When river waters abated sufficiently in mid-June, the Corps of Engineers began replacing the timbers in the gates of the flood control structure to decrease the water flow. About 100 gates remained open on June 20, but all were to be closed by the 23rd, Demoran and Cirino learned.

There is a positive long-term effect of fresh water on oyster reefs: it enhances oyster production about two years later because of the addition of nutrients to the natural environment by the flood Reef rehabilitation programs carried out by state agencies have also greatly enhanced oyster production.

Louisiana fresh water to aid fish, wildlife growth in Mississippi

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers is recommending gate-controlled introduction of fresh water from the Mississippi River into Lake Pontchartrain and the Mississippi Sound through a structure to be located above the Bonnet Carre' Spillway.

The Corps recommendation follows a feasibility study completed by the agency, according to the Gulf Coast Research Laboratories' monthly newsletter 'Marine Briefs.'

The purpose of the study was to determine potential freshwater sources which could be diverted to enhance fish and wildlife production in Mississippi and Louisiana estauries.

Victor Mavar, of Mavar Shrimp & Oyster Co., Biloxi, one of the earliest proponents of the project, says, "There isn't anything we could do that would have as significant a beneficial effect on fisheries production as this project.' Widely endorsed Mavar said all of the seafood industry groups, commercial and sports fishermen, scientists, and fishery agencies contacted have endorsed the freshwater diversion effort. So have the members of congress from both states and, after becoming governor of Louitask force to oversee its development.

The freshwater introduction will add nutrients to the estaurine areas. thereby increasing fish, oyster, crab, and shrimp productivity.

It will also reduce salt water intrusion, thereby reducing salinities and lessening the occurrence of a major predator of oysters, the conch or drill.

Mavar and Richard Waller, an assistant fishery biologist at the Gulf Coast Research Laboratory, attended a recent meeting in New Orleans were the Corps representatives presented the results of the feasibility study. The Corps will hold public meetings in October and the final report on the study is due in February 1984.

Completion date 1990

It is estimated that the water diversion project will be completed in 1990. Extensive leveeing along the Mississippi River and its tributaries has helped diminish the supplies of nutrient-rich fresh water entering the estauries. At the same time, salt water has intruded into the marshes, resulting in the loss of marsh habitat. The supplemental fresh water that would be introduced should reverse the siana, David Treen appointed a special declining trend of natural productivity in recent years and promote the reestablishment of marshes.

The Corps of Engineers found that the most feasible method of introducing controlled amounts of fresh water would be to construct a gated structure in a Mississippi River levee setback, lacated just above the Bonnet Carre' Spillway control structure.

A conveyance channel would extend from the river to Lake Pontchartrain through the existing spillway levees. The conveyance channel would have a sedimentation trap that would contain heavy sediments.

An important part of the feasibility study was the development of a water budget for the supplemental flows required to achieve the desired objec-

Need entity to manage

Those attending the meeting to discuss findings of the feasibility study were told that before the Corps of Engineers will approve the project, a local entity has to assume responsibility for the operation and management of the allocation of the fresh water. Construction costs would be jointly borne by the federal government and the states, with Mississippi and Louisiana assuming financial responsibility for maintenance of the structure upon its completion.

The idea of diverting river water into the estauries dates back to the 1800's, according to Mavar, but those early efforts were never completed.

In recent years a small diversion structure has been operated successfully at Bayou Lamoque, La., and two other river diversion plans are in stages of development.

Patrol chief reports only one holiday death

Hard work by troopers of the Highway Patrol during the 1983 Fourth of July holiday weekend set a new standard in limiting traffic fatalities, Col. Donald Butler, chief of patrol, said

"For the first time in the history of the Highway Patrol, only one fatality was recorded during the Fourth of July weekend on highways under our jurisdiction," Butler said.

Our troopers worked the highways continuously during the 72-hour holiday, some staying at their posts for 18 hours straight," he said.

An accident in the last three hours of the holiday in which a pedestrian was struck and killed was the only blot on the Highway Patrol's ledger. Two other fatalities were recorded during the holiday period, but neither occurred on roads patrolled by the Highway Patrol. The Fourth of July holiday weekend deaths for the past three years. Thirteen people were killed during the

has been the worst holiday for traffic period in 1980, 18 in 1981 and 15 in 1982. The nine captains who command

Highway Patrol districts in the state established roadblocks throughout the weekend to check drivers licenses and arrest drunken drivers.

patrol activities, 391 DUI citations were issued under Mississippi's newly amended drunken driver law. Troopers confiscated 279 driver licenses in connection with the arrests.

"Highway Patrol headquarters was beseiged with calls today from citizens who saw troopers working this past weekend and who were offering their congratulations and support," Butler

"It is unusual to receive the large number of messages of gratitude that we received when this holiday weekend was over," he added.

"This indicates a growing appreciation for what our people face every day and indicates strong public support for the tougher DUI laws."

"I want to publicly commend the troopers who left their families and were unable to participate in the fun and festivities of the weekend in order to make the roads safer for the rest of us." Butler said.

"The work of these officers and the city police and sheriff's duputies who worked streets and highways under their jurisdiction should be recognized and appreciated by all of us," he said.

According to a recent broadcast sponsored by the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center and The Prudential Insurance Company, women who are extremely overweight or underweight tend to give birth to smaller-than-average

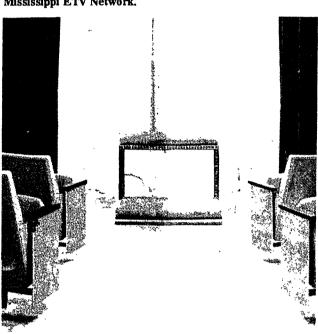

Dr. Roy Petrie, associate professor of obstetrics and gynecology at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center, compared the weights of nearly 300 women with those of their newborn babies and found a significant correlation.

"Women who are underweight tend to have babies who are very small. The same is also true of obese or overweight mothers. The underweight mother, herself being undernourished, needs additional calories and energy to get herself in good condition. Nature is going to take care of putting those calories to mother first and then subsequently to the baby. On the other hand, an overweight mother who needs more energy to maintain her daily requirements needs a certain amount of calories to do this. Whatever is left is sent to the

Dr. Petrie referred to smaller babies as being "growth retarded." He said, "The smaller baby doesn't seem to function as well as a baby of normal weight. He is behind catch up."

In politics, the absence of a genuine politics of economic interest hampers any challenge to the conservative elites who govern in southern states and symbolic social issues continue to fuel the proto-Dorian convention, thus dividing lower socioeconomic groups, black and white. The South today is the geographical center of resurgent far-right politics. In matters of thought and philosophy, the "savage ideal" still lurks behind attempts to purge books from libraries, to push teaching of "creation science" in the public schools. The opposition to women's rights is probably Much was changed since Cash wrote 'The Mind of the South,' and many of the changes were needed. However, I am certain that Cash would be profoundly upset to witness, not the Americanization of the South, but the "Southernization" of America.

factors shaping the southern

My thesis is that the Southern Mind represents a definite culture, or attitude toward life, widely acclaimed in the South a heritage primarily from the old south, but greatly modified and extended by conscious and unconscious effort over the past 100 years to protect itself from the encroachments of three hostile factors: the Yankee mind, the Modern mind, and Self-interest, especially of the dominant planter class, energized this cultural amalgam but did not constitute its totality.

Cash believed that after the Nat Turner rebellion (1831) the South became a selfconscious region marked by defensiveness and hypersenity to criticism.

Its two basic defense mechanisms were conceptualized by Cash as the "proto-Dorian convention" and the
